Q4

To reach our collective potential, we must work together to build up Ottawa. That requires a council in which each member commits to city wide leadership. What is your intended approach to collaboration with council, city staff and economic partners?

My approach is to consider all stakeholders inputs and try and recognize the various needs and goals at play when making decisions. My background is in technology and I understand the need to listen and gather information before decision making. City staff and fellow council members, as well as businesses and other civic organizations all need to provide input and be listened to when creating my decision making matrices. My primary constituents however, are the people living and working in my ward, with their input being prioritized as they are my primary stakeholder.

What key characteristics and skills do you possess that make you a great leader and ambassador for the city of Ottawa, and the national capital region?

I am a down-to-earth person with realistic goals and aspirations, with a background of volunteering in service in times of crisis. I have won many awards for my volunteering. My background in high-technology and also in the construction trades all give me valuable life experience when working with the public, with business leaders as well as with other political leaders. My volunteer experiences have granted me the opportunity to work with the various levels of government, advocating for resources to my Members of Parliament, Members of Provincial Parliament, and with local municipal leaders and city staff. I am skilled in working with people.

Q6

What are your top three priorities for Ottawa's future?

City growth without compromising our responsibility to our residents and their futures, ensuring we protect and steward the resources we have been set in charge over, and building better, healthier connections between all the people I work with and for.
